

Ca' Pietra

Curates

Create your own Soft Sorbet with:

Inker Porcelain Pink (1)

Nova Porcelain Powder Blue (2)

Colour Pop Ceramic

Petroleo (3)

Areia (4)

Rosa Clara (5)

Yoga Penny Porcelain Blush (6)

Navajo Encaustic Blush Rose (7)

Menagerie Ceramic by Michael Angove Little Key (8)

Maldon Limestone (9)

the ones to watch

To Head

SOFT SORBET SHADES

Chosen by Style The Clutter

 styletheclutter

 styletheclutter.com

Dilute terracotta to apricot, turn down the dial on gold to create parchment and primrose, lighten olive to mint, and MONIKH's Seventies shades shift to a far more muted profile. Think pretty pastel, softly-softly hues reminiscent of an ice cream parlour's whimsical wares.

Not quite the other end of the spectrum (both feet remain very much in the colourful camp rather than in the absent of colour polar opposite), interiors aficionado Style The Clutter heralds Soft Sorbet Shades as her trend-not-to-miss.

'Soft minty greens have been forecast to be the colour of 2020, which means pastel shades are still on trend for next year. However, unlike the bright shade of pastels we have seen in the past, it looks like they are taking on a more subtle, natural tone. The greens are more mossy, the pinks have a more orange tone and with yellow, think primrose. I personally love using pastel shades in children's rooms and think the new mossy green tone will be a big hit in 2020.'

Don't be tricked into thinking pastels are purely for spring and summer months.

Fresh as they are, choose glazed tiles in a bathroom fond of candlelight and they'll reflect the flame's glimmer so your space basks in an amber glow. Remember too that pastel tiles both matte and glossy are the perfect foil to statement wooden furniture - a failsafe way to imbue a scheme with depth and warmth.

“Soft minty greens have been forecast to be the colour of 2020”